It was discontinued because people didn't buy it.

People didn't buy it because it was a piece of <expletive deleted>!

Subject : Re: REQUEST: Help finding WWV receiver!

WWV transmits a time code as bass tones (100Hz??), one per second, short or long. You won't hear them on those toy radios, but they're there. A Real Radio(Tm) driving a Klipschorn should do nicely.

Then there's WWVB on 60 kHz that also transmits time code as pulses at 1 bit per second. When I was active in RTTY I wrote a WWVH decoder as a M6800 routine that was called 100/second.
